A full analysis would be interesting, but quickly glancing at gen election turnout w/ caucus States reveals this:

(13 caucus States total)
4 in top 10 States
2 in bottom 10 States
7 in top half

MN ranked 1
HI ranked 50

Seems slightly in favor of caucus, but still inconclusive

. @4alarmsafeplace · 13 Nov 2017
MN didn't have that high turnout in caucuses tho. The reason we rank so high in the general is due to our voter registration policies.

Honestly, most young ppl probably didn't come out to vote for Northam, but to reject Gillespie and Trump. This was a repudiation of Trump above all else. And it proves that Dems need a Corbynesque surge in youth vote in order to win future elections.

Northam won bcuz results matched polls in Virginia. Gov. decertified hackable machines. The count was ACCURATE. Optical scanners or paper ballots should be used in ALL States to ensure all votes are counted.

If Northam's lead holds, I don't think there are many lessons in it for Democrats. The main question is: Do Republicans in centrist states/suburban districts take these returns as message that Trumpism ■ a loser in 2018? If so, how do they change course?

2. With respect to the hiring of future DNC senior staff in the communications, technology, and research departments, in the case of vacancy, the DNC will maintain the authority to make the final decision as between candidates acceptable to HFA.

3. Agreement by the DNC that HFA personnel will be consulted and have joint authority over strategic decisions over the staffing, budget, expenditures, and general election related communications, data, technology, analytics, and research. The DNC will provide HFA advance opportunity to review on-line or mass email, communications that features a particular Democratic primary candidate. This does not include any communications related to primary debates - which will be exclusively controlled by the DNC. The DNC will alert HFA in advance of mailing any direct mail communications that features a particular Democratic primary candidate or his or her signature.

Have you actually worked a caucus? Show up at a certain time or you can't vote. All day any time is much much more democratic.

It wasn't championed by a progressive. It was championed by Nina Turner, who repeatedly endorsed Clinton well after it supposedly happened.

> The move comes as a surprise — and a blow for Clinton. Turner had been among her most enthusiastic cheerleaders in the Buckeye State and nationally. She was involved early with the Ready for Hillary super political action committee that promoted Clinton as a presidential candidate before the former U.S. secretary of state launched her campaign.
> Turner spoke last fall in New York and earlier this year at a Cleveland fundraiser for the now-defunct organization. In June, she spoke at a grassroots-organizing event for the Clinton campaign in Cleveland. She also had served on the board of Correct the Record, another pro-Clinton super PAC but recently severed ties.
> And Clinton's husband, former President Bill Clinton, sent a letter on Turner's behalf last year that sought donations for her ultimately unsuccessful run for Ohio secretary of state.
> Turner said Thursday that, despite her efforts on Clinton's behalf, she had not formally endorsed the former U.S. secretary of state. Clinton, she said did not lose her support so much as Sanders earned it with his attention to issues dear to her. She stressed that her decision had nothing to do with controversy over Clinton's private email server
> "Yes, I was out there, 'ready' [for Clinton], because I wanted to make sure Democrats were ready," Turner said. "I thought it was important to show that Democrats were ready to go right back at it for 2016 and 2016. This has nothing to do with the secretary."

Most important story of the day is in The New York Times.
mobile.nytimes.com/2017/10/14/us/ …

> factory in Mexico would burn to the ground. She cried that night. And the next night. And the next.
> Then, that Monday, Shannon did the only thing she knew how. She put on her electric-blue eyeliner and went back to work.
> Halcyon Days and Stormy Months

> For months, Shannon kept working as the factory shut down around her. She struggled with straightforward questions: Should she train workers from Mexico for extra pay or refuse? Should she go back to school or find a new job, no matter what it paid?

This is what the same writer had to say about hanging out with Chelsea Clinton vogue.com/article/waitin…

> When Chelsea walks into Birch, which is packed, people immediately notice her. Without missing a beat, she says, "Can I deputize you to go upstairs and look for a table, and in return I will stand in line and get us coffee?" Sure, I say. "What would you like?" A latte. "Whole, skim, 2 percent, or soy?" she asks, and we both laugh. Whole, I say. "Yum," she says. "Good call." I am instantly charmed.

I had this theory months ago. Only fly in the ointment is impeachment.

> HOURS , several very senior Senate Republicans have reached out to us with the following theory: The White House's top legislative priority -- tax reform -- fails. Republicans lose the House, and keep the Senate by a razor-thin margin at best. Trump blames Senate Republicans, who have not dismantled the Senate filibuster rules. He runs in 2020 against Senate Republicans, and uses Pelosi and Schumer as a foil.

I believe:

- Health care is a right, not a privilege limited to the wealthy and those with jobs that provide coverage
- Coverage must meet basic standards that protect individuals. Nobody should have to sell their house because a family member has cancer. A "cheap" plan that won't cover preventative care, serious illness, pharmaceutical coverage, mental health, maternity care, birth control or other care for women is a sham. So is a policy that nobody can afford
- No woman should be denied coverage of services based on the religious beliefs of her employer
- We must ensure that quality health care is available not only in our cities, but in rural areas as well. As pointed out recently by U.S. Rep. Terri Sewell, "Alabama's rural hospitals have been struggling for years, largely due to inadequate reimbursements, low volume and high operating costs." Since 2010, five rural hospitals have closed in Alabama, leaving residents without local care. As Rep. Sewell notes, "We need more robust Medicaid funding in Alabama if our rural hospitals are to survive."

Very few have ACA (exchange) plans. It's like 5% of the country. More are on Medicaid, which ■ not expensive for them and Trump would cut.
